No indications of their presence in this country for a long time heretofore exist nor do the people living in the valley know of any Indians having been about there for a long time since the settlers in the valley of the San Pedro most of whom I saw personally are thrifty intelligent and an energetic lot of people bent up on making themselves homes, hard working agriculturists and indefatiguable miners of the mountains. There are also in the mountains quite a number of prospectors and agents for capitalists all of whom feel perfectly assured of safety from molestation by hostile Indians on account of the presence of troops at Camp Huachuca. | | of the valley and a really valuable portion of Southeastern Arizona be delayed indefinitely by the inevitable raids of the yet unreserved wild Indians.

| | The close proximity of this Garrison and the ease of access by these people to aid should it be needed renders them confident of security and the wild Indians — doubtless judging from their long absence both through fear to molest them. Men travel through the valley unarmed and raigned the mountains all over as a rule unmindful of wild Indians | |
