Mr. Charles J. Whitfield,
Chief of Research,
Soil Erosion Service,
United States Department of the Interior,
Box 98, Gallup, New Mexico.

Dear Mr. Whitfield:

Your letter of March 13 addressed to me in Salt Lake City has been referred here for answer. (Your file reference No. 45 Navajo Project.)

You probably know that the Division of Extension and Industry of the Indian Service has an extension staff on each of the Navajo Reservations. Mr. A. G. Hutton is agricultural extension agent at the Southern Navajo jurisdiction in charge of extension work there. Mr. Oscar D. Stanton is the agricultural extension agent in charge of extension work at the Western Navajo jurisdiction, and Mr. David W. Rogers is the agricultural extension agent in charge of the extension work at the Northern Navajo jurisdiction. These men would be in a position to give you detailed information with reference to the development of the livestock industry for the Navajo country and would be able to put you in touch with Indian and white owners of livestock in their districts from whom you may obtain livestock for use in your work.

Mr. Hutton is a trained livestock man and I am sure you will find it to your advantage to contact him as well as the other agricultural extension agents.

Sincerely yours,

A. C. Cooley,
Director of Extension and Industry.
