

journalist, or radio commentator who chose to support him or his cause. So far as Joe McCarthy was concerned, the maneuver succeeded to a startling degree.

Those who engaged in it—and their names came out during the hearings—knew Joe's characteristics; they knew he was gentle and aggressive; rough in the fight and forgiving immediately afterward; humble in his heart but giving the impression of cantankerousness. They also knew that while he appeared to be hale and even physically powerful, he was not a strong man, suffering physical pain, sometimes so much pain that he had to give way to it.

They knew all his weaknesses, for some of them had, since he came to the Senate, acted as though they were his close personal friends. They left him bitter, disillusioned, hurt. He was hounded to death by those who would not forget and could not forgive. He was a lonely man among his associates and he often wondered who were his friends.

He and his Jeannie adopted a little girl and that brought Joe a happiness which he had not ever known before. There can be no question that he regarded the 1958 election as a problem because he realized the forces that would be pitted against him. He believed he would win that election and he said that he did not fear his opponent, Walter Kohler. He recognized though he would have to take on the entire Eisenhower administration, the modern Republicans, the Committee for an Effective Congress, the money that would be raised against him in New York by the mysterious Arthur Goldsmith, the Communists, their fellow travelers, and dupes. It meant a fight—a terrific fight and his health was ebbing.

It is said that you can only really know a man if you live with him. I did not live with Joe under one roof, but there were times when we saw much of each other and when I was intimately concerned with his effort to drive the Communists from American life.

As an American, as a Jew, as an anti-Communist, I can proudly say that Joe McCarthy was my friend and that I have never encountered an opponent of his who equaled him in patriotism and courage. God bless his soul and forgive those who sent him to his death.
