ADWR Basin Sweeps and Bulk Data Collection Efforts
By Subbasin and Water Year

December 2025

Explanation

The purpose of this report is to show above average data collection periods within groundwater basins/subbasins for a given water year. The term "water year" is originally defined by the U.S. Geological Survey in reports that deal with surface-water supply as the "12-month period October 1, for any given year through September 30, of the following year. The water year is designated by the calendar year in which it ends and which includes 9 of the 12 months. Thus, the year ending September 30, "2025" is called the "2025" water year". Above average water level counts are commonly associated with basin sweeps. A basin sweep is an intensive effort to measure as many wells as necessary in a specific basin or subbasin to provide a comprehensive picture of the groundwater system. For example, the Phoenix AMA contains several hundred wells measured every five years. The resulting water level data supports several water management and hydrology programs, and are available to cities, consultants, other agencies, and the public. The data in these tables are represented by water year (Oct 1st – Sept 30th) starting from 10/01/1979 and not calendar year (Jan 1st – Dec 31st).

Table 1 shows the water year in which the number of water levels collected was significantly above average. This does not necessarily indicate that a sweep occurred. Above average water level counts may be the result of additional small scale regional data collection efforts supporting a specific project, or an increase in data collection frequencies on a select number of wells for a period of time. However, most years do reflect basin sweep years. In some cases, data collection may have spanned from one year to the next and may only show the year which displays a higher number of entries (e.g. a sweep that starts in December and ends the following February).

Table 2 shows the exported Access table of raw data from the GWSI (Groundwater Sites Inventory) database. It includes all ADWR water level entries by subbasin and water year (up to 09/30/2025).
